TWO REASONS FOR THE INDIAN RAID OF AUGUST 3, 1781

Sudbury, Canada, now known as Bethel, Maine, was raided by Indians in 1781 because of two possible reasons.

The Indians who lived on the Androscoggin river were part of the great Algonquin nation, and were known as the Anasagunticooks. The French in Quebec invited them to Canada early in the eighteenth century and because of the advance of the white men many of them accepted. They were common visitors up and down the Androscoggin valley and were regarded as very peaceful. However, the Anasagunticooks claimed that they still owned the upper valley, never having relinquished it by deed or treaty above Ramford Falls. This territory was rich with fur, fish and game, and because of this was thought by many to be the cause of the raid.

Soon after the French invited the Anasagunticooks to Canada the English captured Quebec and ended the French control. During the Revolutionary War these Indians fought for England and were paid about $6 for each prisoner or scalp brought from England. Massachusetts retaliated by offering $40 for each Indian scalp. Perhaps this was the cause of the raid on Sudbury, Canada.

But to look back, we can hardly blame the Indians if they objected to the white man's invasion. Please keep this in mind, August third, when the George A. Mumford Post, No. 81, American Legion, will stage a pageant to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of that last Indian raid. These Indians will be your neighbors in disguise.

FILMORE—KING

The marriage ceremony of Miss Helen Lucille King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph King of Bryant Pond, and Albert K. Filmore, pastor of the Baptist church at Steep Falls, was solemnized at Portland by Rev. F. C. Wright, D. D., at high noon, Monday. The single ring service was used. The couple was unattended. The bride wore a peach colored traveling suit.

Mr. Filmore is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bedford Filmore of Port Elgin, N. B., and will be married June 28 at Steep Falls. He was graduated from the Normal school at Fredericton, N. B., and a college at Wolfville, N. S., and prepared for the ministry at the Gordon Theological School in Boston.

After a wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Filmore will be at home at the parsonage at Steep Falls.

FIFTH ANNUAL NEW ENGLAND INSTITUTE OF COOPERATION

The fifth annual meeting of the New England Institute of Cooperation will be held at the University of Maine on June 23 to 25. This is the fifth year that the representatives of the New England Agricultural Colleges, departments of agriculture, cooperative selling and buying organizations, and all those interested in the field of marketing and cooperation will meet to discuss problems which are now facing agriculture.

The Institute had its beginning at the Connecticut Agricultural College in 1927. In 1928 the Institute was held at the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst, in 1929 at Burlington, Vt., and last year at Kingston, R. I. The meetings are open to everyone interested in the field of marketing and cooperation. The more important marketing problems of farmers and farmers' cooperatives will be discussed by leaders in New England and the northeastern part of the United States.

The Domestic Arts Department will hold an exhibition of its work on Tuesday afternoon from two to four o'clock. All friends of the school are cordially invited.

The Manual Training shop will be open to the public from two to four o'clock on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons and also on Commencement Day. Various types of the year's work will be on exhibition.

Owing to the heavy rain the Girl Reserve service which had been scheduled to be given on the campus at eight o'clock was held in the reception room of the Students' Home. The installation ceremony and the senior farewell service were conducted by Miss Wight. The candles used as symbols of the Girl Reserve work added greatly to the impressiveness of the occasion.

The faculty and the members of the Senior class will be the guests of Principal and Mrs. Hanson at their summer home at Mechanic Falls at a picnic supper on Thursday.

The girls of the Normal class accompanied by Miss Wight, enjoyed a picnic at Songo Pond Tuesday afternoon. The following is the program for Commencement Week:

Sunday, June 7, 3 P. M.—Daylight Time—Baccalaureate Service at Congregational Church.

Thursday, June 11, 10 A. M. Daylight Time—Graduation Exercises at William Bingham Gymnasium.

Several parents with prospective students have been visitors at the school the past week.

The last special chapel program was presented in the gymnasium on Tuesday afternoon. After the usual devotional exercises conducted by Principal Hanson a French program was presented by pupils of the French classes.

Miss Verna Berry gave a clear and comprehensive recense of a French play entitled "Voyage de Monsieur Perrier," which was presented by members of the Junior class.

The characters were as follows: M. Perrier, Philip Carter; Mme. Perrier, Katherine Carter; Arlene Goddard; Mark Hamlin; Donald Stanley; Fred Jenkins; Custer Quimby; Le Fautour.

Two scenes of this play were delightfully presented, each character being well fitted to his or her part.

Two French songs, one by the French students of the Girls' Glee Club and another by a group of six boys, prepared under the direction of Mrs. Bowdoin, added much to the program.

Miss Litchfield and her students should feel that their efforts in preparing this program were much worthwhile.

The chapel hour was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone.

Mrs. Charles Swan is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Flint. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Stevens, who have been traveling in the South the past winter, have returned to their home at Bethel, in Mayville.

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

On Monday of this week the home of Mrs. Marjorie Brooks in North Pownall was the scene of a most enjoyable occasion in the celebration of the golden wedding anniversary of Mrs. Brooks' father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Cushman. The relatives, including nearly all of both families, gathered at this delightful home during the forenoon, and not a minute was wasted in idleness.

After greetings had been said by all, the friends gathered in the dining-room and kitchen for a buffet lunch served by Mrs. Marjorie Brooks, and what a lunch it was. Grace was said by Rev. H. W. A. Potter. After the lunch, those present gathered in the parlor while Mrs. Cushman, the "bride," opened her many gifts of the occasion. TWO-MINUTE SERMON

by REV. GEORGE HENRY

The church devoted itself for centuries to reforming men. Now it is forming them. "Bring up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart therefrom." Next to the Bible School the young people's society is the most important auxiliary to the church. Wisdom suggests that we make it hard for a child to do wrong and easy to do right. Make the home and church so attractive that the young will be drawn and held as by a magnet. The sour, hard-shelled, sanctimonious preachers ought to go into the undertaking business. Spread your features. The long face should go into the discard with the long coat and the collar that buttons behind. Christ used a little child to illustrate his definition of greatness. No man is as strong as he might have been had he kept himself clean. Bad habits formed in youth are hard to break and they leave their scars. Good habits are as easily acquired under right direction. The greatest success in life is dependent upon purity of heart.

Q.

THAT KIND OF PERSON

By FANNIE HURST

(Copyright 1931 by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(By Wire Service.)

THE chronic restlessness which hest the soul of Agnes Lynn was largely due to the fact that she was continually being made aware by appreciative friends, that she was too big a person for her small role.

Her role was that of primary teacher in the two-room rural schoolhouse nestled in a rather lovely valley that separated, by miles, two thriving villages.

For four years Agnes Lynn, who had been graduated from Normal school in the capital city of the state, had held this position as one of the two teachers in the little old, proverbially red, schoolhouse that stood beneath a pair of twin oaks and was backed by a beautiful rise of Pennsylvania mountains. The second teacher was a poet-faced, middle-aged man named Roger Nash who had a bad thing due to what some people feared was a tubercular bone condition. But that was gossip.

Except for the insistence from her local friends, as well as those in one or another of the two adjoining villages, to say nothing of those in the city where she had been educated, Agnes could have found it in her heart to relax to the quiet, rural beauties of her life as school teacher in this green and placid valley. And yet she knew that she owed it to herself, her friends and her future, to put to more significant use the fine and virile brain with which she was so undoubtedly endowed.

It took all of her will power to fight against the inertia induced by the tranquil years in the tranquil valley. The children who trooped daily into her classroom were clean-faced, clean-hearted little youngsters, prodigets of a wholesome agricultural environment, eager to be friends with her. The pleasant companionship of Roger Nash, tall, visionary, passive, was of sufficient intellectual stimulation to ward off tedium. Her room at the farmhouse where she boarded was a lovely old one of rare, early American furniture, spot-and-span cleanliness and a view of apple orchard, mountain stream and rich countryside that never ceased to delight her. As a matter of fact, an apple tree actually leaned in at her window to awaken her.

That was why, throughout the year she spent in the valley, Agnes had to fight against the sweetish kind of inertia that enveloped her. Life was pleasant here, so deeply tranquil, each day filled with a fresh simplicity. And yet in her heart she realized how meager the sphere, how unworthy of her abilities, how spiritually and mentally lazy of her to remain. Teaching limited her talents. Throughout her college career Agnes had exhibited a talent for executive work.

Her chance came when the principal of the Normal school from which she had graduated wrote an offer to recommend her for the position of executive secretary to the vice president of a Chicago mortgage and trust company.

There was simply no withstanding the lure of this offer. It meant not only the tripling of her salary, but it offered her contacts that could lead to big achievements in the business world. There did not seem much reason for Agnes to hesitate. And what hesitating she did was too private to confide to even the best of her friends. She would not have dared to admit it. Opportunity had rapped long and insistently at Agnes' door.

Chicago, insofar as its resemblance to the life she left in the valley was concerned, might have been a city, not in another state, but on another planet. Not even her life as a student in the capital city of her state had prepared her for the degree of intensity, the complicated arduousness that awaited her. Life was like a gale that caught her from the moment she stepped off the train and kept her swirling and twirling at high tempo.

The demands of her position also kept her keyed to a degree of intensity that was astonishing as it was exhilarating. For the first few months of the new environment, bewildered as she was in many respects, Agnes realized that she owed it to herself to have ventured forth into these arduous fields of enterprise. Here were the old fears of intellectual inactivity, mental decline and physical atrophy. The city had her in its tenacious grip.

She rose in her fairly comfortable boarding house room that had for its view the window of another boarding house room precisely like hers, she dressed in haste, she breakfasted in haste at a cafeteria, she met her colleagues in the tense, formal, impersonal round of the city, she performed her tasks with a mechanical and efficient, unrelenting, she lunched in a hurriedly chosen club to the rattling of wheels and the roar of the elevated railroad, she sat for her employer for an afternoon of more of the speed of routine, she dined in a table d'hôte restaurant with the evening paper clapped up against the upper lip, she sought out the movies, the theatre, the company of a male or female colleague in her office for her evening entertainment.

There was a man. There naturally would be in the life of an attractive, up-and-going girl like Agnes. He was salesmanager for the Chicago branch of an enormous automobile concern. A hale, hearty fellow, with concrete ambitions, tried and true. Lillianthal was headed for wealth. He wanted power, position, money. He was on his way to obtain them. He was already slated for one of the vice presidency plums of his firm.

Strange that he should have been attracted to a girl of the particular type of Agnes. There was nothing obvious about her. She dawned upon him slowly. There was the obvious about her. He was precisely what he seemed to be. In the phraseology of Agnes, Lillianthal, "And yet, buried in him was the consciousness that here in this slender, well-bred girl, was the sort of woman with whom he could proudly share his ultimate success. He visualized her in pearls and good lace, presiding at his table.

A successful man needed a wife like that. Class! That was Agnes all over—nothing showy, but class!

There came a time when the rather simple routine of the young business woman became a thing of the past. Instead, the best lakeshore hotel restaurant, night after night with Lillianthal. Opera. Races. Motor rides. And all, bear in mind, strictly within the pale of the rigid social formula of Agnes. Lillianthal, who was known to have had his fling, treated her with the kind of elaborate deference a man of his type will show toward the woman he contemplates as mate.

In fact, if Lillianthal erred at all, it was in conservatism. Agnes was to be treated as the woman worthy to become his wife.

For sixteen months Agnes succeeded in sidestepping the impending proposal of marriage. It came one night, the very week, to be exact, that the banking house which employed her services increased her salary by 33 1/3 per cent and gave her a bonus of five hundred dollars.

At the conclusion of eighteen months Agnes was not only justifying the confidence of her friends in her executive ability, but was about to make a marriage that was in keeping with her general success.

It was then, while Lillianthal was waiting a promised week for his answer, that Agnes sat down and took stock.

It was the first time she had dared allow herself the time to make mental inventory of the state of mind and being of this girl who had come out of the valley.

First and foremost it was obvious to her that she was not in love with Lillianthal.

It seemed to her as she sat there facing herself in her boarding house room, that she was bankrupt in countless ways; that she was empty handed, empty-headed. Everything that the new life had brought her was something mechanical and outside of herself. Good clothes, good shoes, good restaurants. She was companionable, and to replace the old joy of the valley that seemed to have flown out of her, there remained nothing.

Lillianthal was out of the question. Confidant, producer to the contrary notwithstanding, Agnes was mis-just. She was not that kind of person. Memory of the valley, sweet mornings of walking to school, the trouping children, the pleasant chat beneath the schoolyard oak trees with a sensitive man called Roger Nash, the simple foods, the simple postures, the lovely, tranquil, early American room, became a nostalgia that was at once too much to bear.

Agnes had dared to take stock of herself. The results were appalling but had to be faced. Agnes was not the kind of person she was supposed to be.

It took courage to go back; it took more courage than she would have believed herself capable of. It is not easy in life to take what may be regarded as a retrogressive step and that is just what Agnes did in returning to her position as school teacher in the valley. At least that is how her friends, who were so ambitious for her, regarded it. She had gone backward. She had not been of the stamina they had hoped.

Agnes is not particularly interested in the psychology of it. She only knows that the valley is sweeter and greener and cleaner than ever and the task of teaching the young is one that fits her with ambition. The days have a tonic for her that nothing else could quite achieve and so have the long, stimulating hours in the company of Roger Nash, the visionary.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

Memorial Day. Again the flags are marking, in silent testimonial, the resting places of our soldier dead. There are many of the boys in blue who are sleeping the last long sleep in this cemetery here, at South Woodstock. I recall the names of Woodard Benson, Albert Green, Nathaniel Fuller, Francis Hammond, Levi Proctor, Lincoln Whitman, Charles Whitman, John M. Bryant, and Oscar Ellingwood—there are two others whose names I cannot remember—all soldiers of the 1861 conflict. One young man, William Silver, whose remains were brought home from overseas, sleeps in the Silver family lot in this cemetery. How appropriate it seemed when the Legion boys of the Jackson-Silver Post of Bryant Pond came each year and performed their Legion services over the grave of their comrade. The salute, in all solemnity, bore the message, "We shall not forget." Many of the graves are unmarked by the flags this year and we hope another year to again see the Legion boys and to again witness their testimonial to our honored soldier dead.

Many from this place attended the baccalaureate sermon at West Paris High School, which was delivered by Eleanor B. Forbes at the Universalist Church. Stanley Andrews and Guyson Davis were noticeable as seniors from this town among the student body in attendance.

The members of the graduating class of West Paris High School are decorating and making ready the Grange Hall where their graduation exercises will take place Wednesday evening, June 3.

Asa Harriman of New Hampshire was a week end visitor of his half brother, A. R. Hendrickson and family, coming also to visit the graves of his mother, the late Anna Harriman, and of his sister, Mary Harriman Chase.

It is to be something very different from the map of today. It is to have a spirit jet streaming from the waters of baptism; it is to believe in love to believe in loveliness, to believe in beliefs; it is to be so little that one can reach to whisper in comfort; it is to turn pumpkins into coaches and mules into horses, loveliness into loveliness and nothing into everything; for each child has its first godmother in its own soul as its first live in a nutshell and count yourself the king of infinite space; it is to see a world in a grain of sand, and a heaven in a wild flower; it is to see the nakedness of your heart and eternity in an hour.

Supreme Court Bars Reservations to Oath of Allegiance—Economy Plans for Post Office Department Are Announced.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FIVE justices of the United States Supreme court have ruled, in the case of Prof. Douglas C. MacIntosh of the Yale divinity school, that a foreigner who seeks American citizenship must take the oath with no reservations about taking up arms for the country in time of war. MacIntosh refused to swear without limiting his obligation to bear arms, and therefore denied the right of naturalization. The same decision was made in the case of Miss Marie Averill Bland, both of whom are Canadians and saw wartime service in France.

Justice Howard Sutherland, who the majority opinion, held that cases properly came within the scope laid down in the case of Ala. Schwegler, pacifist leader, was denied citizenship on virtual the same grounds. He discussed broad omnipotent war power stated congress by the Constitution: "From its very nature, the power, when necessity calls for exercise, tolerates no qualifications limitations unless found in the Constitution or in applicable principles of international law."

The conscientious objector, Justice Sutherland added, "is relieved from obligation to bear arms in obedience to no constitutional provision, expressed or implied; but because, and because, it has accorded with the policy of congress thus to relieve."

Chief Justice Hughes, joined by Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Stone, concurred in the majority opinion. "No other decisions of the Supreme court during the week are of interest. One reversed the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals sustaining the patent granted to Langmuir in 1925 on vacuum tubes used in radio and other speech transmission processes. The patent is owned by the General Electric company. It was attacked by the Decca radio company, which contended that unless the Langmuir tubes were set aside General Electric would have a virtual monopoly of radio tube now in common use. The second decision, the powers of the federal trade commission to regulate advertising are restricted. The commission had ordered the Radio company of Detroit to cease advertising an obesity remedy as "unless accompanied by a statement that it should be taken under the supervision of a physician. The commission held it had the right to protect the public in this way, but the Detroit firm complained that the body was being to censor advertising. In this action it was upheld by the court."

OF AUGUST PICCARD, Swiss scientist, and his assistant, Charles G. Smith, established a new record by sailing 22,500 feet in a balloon. They are convinced they reached the stratosphere and that their observations will be of considerable value. They started from Augsburg, Bavaria, in a hermetically sealed aluminum ball suspended from a large balloon. 18 hours later they landed on a glacier in the Alps of Austrian Tyrol. They nearly suffocated because their supply of oxygen ran short, and they suffered from hunger and thirst.

VERY time President Hoover takes to cabinet member the Rapidan camp a week-end, further plans for reducing government's overhead are concocted. He came the Army, Navy departments, and then it was turn of the Post Office department. Master General Brown and his assistants were the guests and the "lms," and after the conference in woods it was announced that a plan had been adopted that would save $33,000,000 in the present fiscal year and that would produce many millions next year. However, it was hastily stated that efficiency would be increased instead of diminished and that there would be no increase in personnel. The statement indicated that the government has felt the depression, was estimated that due to business conditions revenues to the department this year would be $58,000 below the original estimates.

CRETARY OF AGRICULTURE Hyde seems to be forestalling a Rapidan camp operations by making considerable economies in department expenditures, though it is difficult without curtailing important services. He will be aided during the year by the termination of two emergency items—drought relief and highway construction. These totaled $160,000,000, providing aid for stricken farmers and jobs for the unemployed. Drought loans will be collected from farmers next fall, when their crops are harvested. States which have borrowed from the $80,000,000 emergency highway fund will repay the money over a five-year period through deductions from their regular shares of federal aid.

After deducting extension service and land grant college funds, between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 remains for the department's actual expenses.

THIS year's Memorial day address by President Hoover was delivered in the memorial park at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, where George Washington and his ragged troops spent a terrible winter 153 years ago, and where more than 3,000 of those patriots are buried. The exercises of the day were impressive. Two thousand troops acted as escort to President and Mrs. Hoover and a battery from Phoenixville fired the salute. In his address Mr. Hoover reviewed his past policies in international matters and outlined his plans for the future, especially concerning the reduction of armaments.

The night preceding this, the President was the guest of the Union League club of Philadelphia at a banquet where he was presented with an oil portrait of himself.

EXPERTS from many lands were present when the international labor conference opened in Geneva, but the United States was not represented. Secretary of Labor Donak appointed Miss Mary Anderson, chief of the women's bureau, as the American delegate and she sailed May 12, with the special hope that the conference might adopt an agreement banning night work by women. But just after Miss Anderson reached Europe Mr. Donak sent her a cable instructing her to stay away from Geneva and giving her other missions for the department.

Making his action public, the labor secretary merely said the State department had deemed it "wholly inadvisable" to have any one from the United States government at Geneva either in official or unofficial capacity.

MRS. HARRY PAYNE WHITE, nee's memorial typifying the heroism of the men who went down with the Titanic in order that women and children might be saved was unveiled on the banks of the Potomac in Washington in the presence of President and Mrs. Hoover, and many other prominent persons. Secretary of State Stimson presided at the ceremony. The statue is the contribution of more than 20,000 American women.

MICHELE SCHIRRU, an Italian born naturalized citizen of the United States, was executed by a firing squad in Rome after being convicted of plotting to kill Mussolini and of other activities against Fascism. Schirru admitted his guilt, but said his plans had been abandoned and he was about to return to America when arrested.

INVESTIGATION of the building material industry, especially those phases of it involved in the letting of contracts for government buildings, has been begun by the federal trade commission. It is believed that the inquiry will throw a lot of light on the long existing fight between the Indiana limestone men and the granite and marble men of New England. Such, at least, is the hope of Senator Henrik Shipstead of Minnesota, who introduced the resolution calling for the investigation.

The trade commission, announcing that preliminary work already had been started, said: "In this inquiry the commission will investigate and report facts relating to the letting of contracts for the construction of government buildings, particularly with a view of determining whether or not there are or have been any price fixing or other agreements, understandings or combinations of interests among individuals, partnerships, or corporations engaged in the production, manufacture or sale of building materials with respect to the prices or other terms at or under which such materials will be furnished to contractors or bidders for such construction work."

Senator Shipstead said he introduced the resolution because of complaints that such collusion between the purveyors of building materials did exist and because of further complaints, seemingly aimed at the handling of contracts by the government itself, that specifications for buildings were so framed that they unfairly limited the sources from which materials could come.

The limestone-granite-marble controversy falls in the latter category. The charges are that Indiana's advocates have been too influential and have somehow or other put "Indiana limestone" into the specifications for too many government buildings.

EXILE from Romania and expulsion from the royal family of that country is the fate arranged for Queen Helene, the estranged wife of King Carol. According to Patcia, the official organ of the Zaranist party in Bucharest, a decree has been drafted for submission to the new parliament confirming Helene's exclusion and declaring that she is no longer entitled to the rights and honors accorded to royalty. Parliament is expected to adopt the measure as soon as it assembles, and Helene will leave the country permanently soon thereafter, terminating her uncertain marital status of more than two years. Observation of the queen's saint day last Thursday was forbidden in an order issued by War Minister Stephanescu and authorized by Premier Jorga.

Helene divorced Carol while he was in exile in 1925 with Magda Lupescu. When he made a dramatic flying return to Bucharest last year she spurned his overtures toward a reconciliation and steadfastly refused to be crowned with him.

REFORM and retrenchment in the army of Japan have been decided upon by War Minister Gen. Jiro Minami, Chief of Staff Gen. Hanzhi Kananya and Gen. Nobuyoshi Muto, Inspector general of military education. The army personnel will be reduced by 25,000 and the savings will be devoted to making the army the best equipped in the world.

The people had hoped that the money would go toward lightening their tax burdens; but the war minister explains that only $4,000,000 a year will be saved through the readjustments planned, and "is amount, while hardly noticeable in any tax reduction program, will greatly aid the nation in placing the army on a level with that of Soviet Russia and other countries which maintain effectively equipped forces."

SPAIN'S new Republican government is far from being stabilized yet. Its troubles, both external and internal, continue to cause some uneasiness. According to the authorities in Andalusia, martial law which was proclaimed there several weeks ago may have to be continued indefinitely because of the turbulence of the Communists. Also, martial law has been reinstated in Bida, Valencia, where there was a violent revolt last December. The army, now under command of Don Francisco Aguilera, the new captain general, is kept in readiness to suppress any uprisings anywhere, of either Communists or royalists. Elections in Catalonia resulted in complete victory for Colonel Francisco Macia's party. The assembly therefore will be dominated by those who demand autonomy for Catalonia under the authority of the central government.

The other day the Republican government issued a decree guaranteeing absolute freedom of worship to all religions. The pope regarded this as a clear violation of the concordat still in existence between Spain and the Vatican, and he sent a formal protest to Madrid after a conference with Cardinal Segura, the expelled primate of Spain.

CHINA appears to be on the brink of another civil war. President Chiang Kai-shek bitterly denounces the Communist rebels of Kwangtung and the Kwangsi provinces and says the Nationalist government is forced to choose between accepting Communists into the party, which it will not do, or resorting to war. Large bodies of troops were reported to be moving toward Canton to attack the insurgents.

THROUGH its chairman, J. Weston Allen, the national crime commission makes a report asking all states to pass a uniform law regulating theft information, ownership records and registration to check the growing evil of automobile thefts and the use of stolen cars by criminals. The committee also recommends the enactment by congress of the bill which makes criminal the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of property stolen or taken feloniously by fraud or with the intent to steal or purloin. The bill passed the house of representatives but did not reach the senate during the last session of congress.

Scallops Led to Water

The scallop season is not long and the persons who are employed in it must make the best of the time with the result that in some sections of Long Island and New England the school sessions are curtailed in order to allow the children to do their part. But the government will not permit of any irregularity in the handling of this deficiency and recently a New England fish dealer was fined $1,000 for "watering" scallops. When treated to an ordinary bath the scallops take on size and weight so that an unscrupulous dealer is really selling water at the price of scallops.

There Is No Magic In It

Advertising accomplishes marvelous results and while it seems to perform miracles, nevertheless there is no magic in advertising. The accomplishments of advertising are achieved through the inevitable working out of a natural law.

A well written advertisement presents an article to the mind of the buyer, setting forth its desirable features and qualities, and awakening in the mind of the reader the desire to possess it. A certain number respond at the first impulse, with others several, readings of the advertisement are required.

Good advertising honestly, intelligently and sincerely written backed by good merchandise, good service and modern merchandising methods will build business for the small town merchant as surely as it will increase sales for the larger city merchant. The columns of the Citizen offer an unequalled opportunity for reaching the buyers in Bethel and the adjoining territory at a reasonable cost.
